<sup>2</sup> This book, created after the end of slavery, contains lists of slaves who were emancipated.

Introduction

In Camden County, Georgia thousands of humans were held as slaves. From the late 1700s until the 1860s, these people were bought and sold like cattle, and the deed records reflect this fact. Along-side the deeds for land, cattle, horses, hogs and boats lie the deeds for human beings. In addition, slaves were often used as collateral for loans. Even if a mortgaged slave was not actually sold, the mortgage contains valuable information about that person.

Tracing property back through time can be a confusing, time consuming and frustrating endeavor. Finding people who were held as property can be even more difficult. The deed books were indexed by the names of the grantors and grantees – that is, those who bought and sold the property. Slave names were not indexed. Sometimes, as in the case of Sheriff Sales, even the slave owner's name was not indexed.

African-American ancestry is one of the most difficult subjects to research. Tracing lines of ancestry before emancipation can be almost impossible. Deed research is not only one avenue of research, it is often the only path to finding African-American ancestors.

These deeds are located in the courthouse in Woodbine, the seat of Camden County. Preserved by the Georgia Archives in the 1950s, little has been done to make the deeds more assessable or more useful to researchers. The books have been indexed by the slave owner name, but the slave deeds are mixed in with deeds for other types of property and no index exists based on slave name. In addition, the deeds are hand-written, which makes them difficult to read.

Besides the standard grantor, grantee, date and slave name, included in this volume is information sometimes provided within the deed such as the age of and description of the slave, place of origin, plantation name, etc. This book not only abstracts all found slave deeds in Camden County, but this book also contains an index based on all names found in the deeds: grantors, grantees, witnesses and, most importantly, slaves.

Even those without African-American ancestry will find this volume useful. Many are interested in finding out if their ancestor ever owned another human. For others, owning another human – or many humans – is a sign of the status of their ancestor and a significant clue to the business dealings of those who are long-dead.

Using this abstract and the comprehensive index, one could conceivably trace a slave's purchase history for their entire time in Camden county. In addition, sometimes information is available on where the slave came from if from outside of the area.

For more information on slavery in Camden County, please see the list of books and other documents in the section "Recommended Readings."

Caveats

This book is probably not all-inclusive. Some deeds were not registered in the index as "slave deeds" and so may have been missed in my search. I did not go through each book page by page. However, I have found many slaves deeds that were not registered as being for slaves. I have included them in this volume.

Sometimes I look wistfully at the deed books being utilized by other abstractors. Nice and neat, typed, referenced... it all looks so easy. I hear their complaints over an obscure part of a twenty year-old deed. I look down by my deed book. Heavy, oversized and full of tight, handwritten script – often making references to landmarks long gone and all referring to people long dead.

I have attempted to transcribe all names as accurately as possible; however, archaic handwritten records can be difficult to read. All mistakes in transcription are mine and mine alone.

Personal Note:

This book was a labor of love. I started this project in 2004, not really understanding just how much I had bitten off. During the ensuing four years, I dropped the project while I went back to college and completed another project. In 2008, I picked up the slave deed project and vowed to complete it – no matter what.

To my knowledge, I have no slave ancestors. However, I saw the need for more research tools for African-American researchers. There is a general lack of resources available to those doing African-American research prior to the Civil War – the period before former slaves were included on the Federal Census. I hope this book inspires others to work on projects dealing with this underserved subject.

Notes:

Book I was not copied because it was too large to fit on the copy machine. All original deeds are available at the Camden County Courthouse in Woodbine, Georgia (from 1786-1865). Unfortunately, Charlton County lost any slave deeds they may have had (since their creation in 1854 until 1865) in a devastating fire in 1877. While land deeds were rerecorded, slave deeds were not, probably because they were worthless in 1877.

The first date listed in the deed is the instrument date – or the date of the original agreement. The second date listed in the deed is the recorded date – or the date it was recorded into official county record by the county clerk. The deeds are entered into the record by the recorded date.

The grantor is the person selling the property – in this case, the slaves. The grantee is the person paying for and receiving the property.

Appreciation:

I was greatly aided by James V. Fields of Camden County. He created a series of programming scripts that automated the production of the abstracts and the index. Without his help, this tome would be far less useful.

I would also like to extend my appreciation to Darren Harper, formerly the director of the Bryan-Lang Historical Library. His stamp of approval on this project allowed me to copy the slave deeds without incurring personal expense.
